

UX Interviews & Logo Critiques

Purpose, interview process,
and reflection on feedback

Sasha Roth

Purpose: Representing Yourself

- The purpose of creating these logos is to represent ourselves as individuals in the form of visual media
- The purpose of the UX Interview process is to receive real feedback on the appeal, and more importantly, effectiveness of our initial logo designs

Critiques of Logo #1

- Entirely too boring
- Too much open space, not enough going on
- It's a “nothing logo” – it communicates absolutely nothing
- The blue is unappealing to some
- What is the weird shape on top?
- Favorite quote: “Private Equity. You’re definitely a slumlord.” – Sage
- Another favorite quote: “Go diva give us nothing!” – Phoebe

Critiques of Logo #2

- Opposite problems as Logo #1
- Colors clash, way too saturated, hard to look at
- The wrench was well-liked! But does not represent me specifically
- The font is icky according to Mairon
- Favorite quote: “AI is really bad at understanding how people work, man.” – Mairon

Critiques of Logo #3

- Generally, more well-liked
- The scale throws people off
- Best color scheme, but still needs work
- Like the 2nd logo, the bright colors match me better
- The pixels are confusing?
- Again, just doesn't tell you anything about me, in fact it invokes completely unrelated ideas
- Favorite quote: “Like, this is the splash screen that comes up when they're reading off the side effects. Yeah. Vomiting. Diarrhea. After this, it'll say Johnson & Johnson, a family company.” – Phoebe

New logo design ideas

- Ideas from each interviewee:
 - Mairon: Add your own art style and characters, we love the purple and yellow from #2 and #3, AI sucks
 - Phoebe: Add more to communicate something; as-is, these are all nothing logos. Give us whimsy. Give us joy.
 - Sage: Use the white space more effectively; add graphics that are relevant, and do something fun with the design of the name, not just a fancy font
